A line drawing of a house. The main body of the house has a wall made of irregular stones. On this wall, from left to right, there are two double windows, two single windows, and one tall narrow door-like window. Above the stone wall is a roof with a pattern of small squares representing shingles. On top of the shingled roof is a gabled dormer with vertical siding. The dormer has a single double window.

A line drawing of a stone building. The building features a gabled roof with a textured, shingled appearance. The walls are constructed from irregular, rounded stones. There are several windows: a small rectangular window on the left, a larger rectangular window in the center, and a double window on the right. The drawing is simple, using black outlines on a white background.
