HEALTH AND SAFETY INFORMATION

Handling of these products may cause contamination to the hands and arms. Excessive handling may cause dermatitis or drying of unprotected skin.

Cutting or similar treatment of the product will give rise to respirable dust. Such dust if inhaled in excessive quantities over extended periods can constitute a long-term health hazard. Cutting, etc. unless adequately controlled can project particles at high velocity with consequent risk of impact damage. Lifting and manual handling of concrete products may cause injury to back, hands and feet. Inhalation of any dust produced from cutting etc. should be avoided and eyes should be protected. Avoid direct contact. Always follow recommended safe lifting and manual handling procedures. All waste products must be disposed of appropriately and in accordance with current legislation.

When handling, long protective gloves should be worn. During cutting/drilling or similar activity safety goggles should be worn, as should dust masks to BS EN 2091 Type B or their equivalent. Appropriate protective clothing including protective footwear/gloves must be worn. In addition engineering controls such as wet cutting or dust extraction devices should be applied.

If dust enters eyes wash with clean water. If skin is irritated wash with soap and water then apply suitable cream. Cuts, abrasions etc. should be washed with clean water and treated with the normal first aid method. Hardened particles in the eyes should be removed using normal First Aid method.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

To ensure the best visual effect on the roof, tiles should be selected from a minimum of 3 different pallets from the same batch.
